CITY OFFICIAL PAPER

Saturday, July 7, 1917.

CONCERNING MILITARY CAMP

The big government camp to be established in the peninsula foothills will do more to advertise San Mateo county than any other agency one could think of. Thousands of tourists, friends and relatives of the soldiers will be attracted here who will have an opportunity to see the natural advantages of San Mateo county, enjoy its salubrious climate, unexcelled scenery and beauty. The government is to spend millions here which is certain to benefit all the business men, farmers and others so that we have good cause for rejoincing. San Mateo county is certain to reap a harvest in advertising such as she has never received before. Let us be equal to the occasion and leave nothing undone to show the newcomers and tourists and others what we have and what the possibilities of the peninsula are.

THE PEOPLE ARE BOND WEARY

A San Francisco paper suggests that another highway be constructed parellelling the present state highway down the peninsula to relieve the present conjection of travel. It also offers the suggestion that the county bond itself for a million dollars for this purpose. The people have plenty of burdens in the way of taxation now and will not submit to any further taxation. Why should the taxpayers of San Mateo county burden themselves in the interest of motorists who whisk through the county, many violating the speed laws, tearing the roads and doing other objectionable things? We know the feelings of the people of the county very well and can justly say they will vote no more bonds for road purposes or for any other purpose for that matter.

DUCK HUNTING REMINISCENCES

Story Number 12 by Claude Fox Depicting Game Bird Life On Bay and Marshes

After "Bill" and myself had completed our club-room down in the old granary and had experienced in the loading of shotgun shells until we both felt satisfied in our own minds that we were more proficient in that particular line than the manufacturers of the little Scott gun, we decided, as there was plenty of amunition on ahnd, it would be an extremely wise move on our part to load all the shells . I had one hundred in unmber, so that we would always have a loaded supply to draw from, and then reloading our empty shells when we should return from a hunt. So the first Saturday afternoon subsequent to my birthday was set apart for that purpose, and after dinner we repaired to our headquarters to make ready for the slaughter of ducks which we both felt confident we were destined to accomplish on our opening hunt which took place a week later. We found however, as the afternoon wore on, that the job of loading one hundred shells by mere novices, such as we were, was a task somewhat more than we had bargained for. My pal extracted the exploded caps, while I was kept pretty busy putting the new ones in and forcing them down with the capper into their proper place. This part of the loading was somewhat tedious, but we were engaged in a pleasant and instructive occupation and the anticipation of events which the future was to bring forth did not permit the time to hang heavily on our hands, and we got along fairly well for our first attempt, but supper was on the table awaiting for me before we were each able to heave a sigh of relief as the wads in the last ten shells were pressed carefully down an the shot. Today I would consider it no trick at all to load one hundred shells alone in an hour and a half, but we were both young and had to learn with practically no expereince and the information contained in Scott & Sons pamphlet to guide us in the capacity of our best and as we afterwards ascertained, our most reliable teacher.

The following week I was to return home from school Friday night, as our examinations for the fall term were being concluded in anticipation of the winter vacation, which was fast approaching, and on Saturday we were to have our first hunt. What a long, long week that seemed to me, and as I sit here writing the conclusion is easily reached that "Bill" felt Saturday would never come. How I did work on my examination papers in order to get through on time and when I boarded the train at San Mateo that Friday afternoon I was not worrying one single bit what my percentage would be, or whether I had passed my examinations or not. "Duckitis" had me, and it had me bad. My only thought was of the morrow, and the satisfaction which comes, after months of patient waiting, with the knowledge that at last the yearnings of our respective hearts would soon be gratified and the rustle of the wild ducks wings would be sweet music to the ears of "Bill" and myself for a period of six weeks of complete happiness and unbroken pleasure.

My pal met me at the depot and as we walked homeward the final arrangements for the hunt were talked over and agreed upon. Neither of us was familiar with the marsh land, although we had some general idea of it, so starting out before daybreak was out of the question. We would get our breakfast at seven and leave at seven-thirty. Now don't ask me if we were on time. "Bill" had his breakfast and was over to my place just as the first red streaks of dawn were chasing the stars from the eastern sky. I had been up some time and was waiting for breakfast. Soon it was over, our lunches were stowed carefully away in the pockets of a new hunting coat father had bought for me and with a hasty goodbye to dad and mother, and any number of "be carefuls" in return, we were off. I also had a fine new pair of rubber boots and "Bill" brought along a pair which he used when helping out down in the old "Pioneer Livery Stable" on Main street, then run by Jack Stafford and Tom Dugan.

As we fairly ran down the back steps in our eagerness to get away, broad daylight was fast approaching. What a glorious morning it was. The sky was cloudless ,with not a breath of wind stirring, and the air cold, sharp and bracing, with the old wooden sidewalks white with one of the first frosts of the coming winter. Of course every boy in the neighborhood knew full well the night before that we were going hunting. How we did wish, as we hurried towards the Sweeney field, that those boys were up to see us starting for the marsh. Within five minutes we had climbed over the fence that separated Stambough street from the long brown sweep of tar weed that stretched away to the southeast. Our destination was the "First Fence" and the "Little Ponds" at that time the most talked of places on the whole marshlands by those afflicted with "duckitis". Between the northeast line of the Sweeney field and the marsh proper lay a strip of land varying in width from sixty to three hundred feet called the mud flats upon which no grass grew and which at the high spring tides was covered with water which receded as the tide fell, leaving small puddles or hot ponds along the edge of the marsh which remained filled with water, and which constituted the favorite feeding ground for the spoonbills at that time a duck very plentiful upon the marsh, but a species of the web-foots which was very little thought of by the epicures of the day. At present that idea is entirely changed, for a good fat spoonbill is one of the most delicious ducks to be obtained, not excepting the much prized canvasback.

As we came in sight of the mud flat I loaded t he gun and our eyes searched every hot pond carefully for the sight of our first victims. Large flocks of sandpipers were flying back and forth in search of their breakfast while the mud flat was covered with hundreds of plover and curlew. Many of these birds were within easy range but we were after ducks and nothing else would satisfy us. Suddenly "Bill" grabbed me by the arm and wispered "get down". We were only about two hundred yards east of the spot where Antonio Genochie now has his home. We got down on one knee and as we did so my pal pointed across the flat to quite a good sized pond of water running along the edge of t he salt grass, and set my heart thumping with that one word "ducks." I quickly made them out, swimming along with their bills down feeding in the midst of a large flock of snipe and plover. Oh! the excitement of that moment. Of course I was to have the first shot. Slipping off my hunting coat I left it with "Bill" and I started working my way n earer on my hands and knees. As I got closer to them I could see there were six, and apparently not paying any attention to me. When about forty yards from them I raised up on one knee and took aim. The ducks raised their heads about the same time, and just as I pulled the trigger they jumped. The result was that I undershot them, in other words made a clean miss, but I had killed two plover and half a dozen sandpipers, so I was not so disappointed as I otherwise would have been. Loading the gun I handed it to "Bill" for it was his turn next. Down along the flats we went, keeping in the edge of the field until we reached a point about where the pumping plant of the Water Company now stands. The sun was up and the coating of white frost was fast disappearing from the short grass. All at once the calling of a flock of wild geese attracted our attention. Higher up in the field near the spot where poor Silas Christofferson crashed down to his death a few months ago, was a setting where the wheat had been threshed the year before. Over this a flock of spreckled breasted brandt were circling. Lower and lower they came in their endeavors to alight until they seemed to be about thirty yards nigh, when suddenly they flared and started to climb skywards. At the same time two dark figures came to a sitting posture in the center of that setting. Instantaneously three of those geese came hurtling down to the ground as four sharp reports rang out on the morning air. We ran up the field as fast as our legs could carry us to where Joe Leathers and Ben Chew were just picking up their trophies. They had been out all night moonlight shooting and had nearly fifty ducks besides the three geese. How we did envy them their bag of game. They soon left us and started home, while we headed back to the marsh. Soon "Bill" spied three ducks in a hot pond, and then I had a chance to learn something in the art of sneaking game. Instead of attempting to approach the ducks as I had done on my hands and knees, my pal lay flat on his stomach in the damp grass and wriggled himself along in much the same fachion as a snake crawls. Believe me too, it counted, for you could scarcely see him as he approached closer and closer. Without raising up at all, but resting on one elbow, "Bill" took aim and fired. Oh joy, only one duck flew away. He had killed two spoonbills and we were as happy as a pair of clams at high tide. How we did look those birds over to see where the shot marks were. We kept heading eastwards down along the mud flats until we could see the "First Fence' about a quarter of a mile away. A half dozen flocks of geese came flying in from the marsh and passed up into the grain fields. An occasional shot to the south and east gave us to understand that other hunters were in quest of game that morning. When we reached the fence we crossed over the mud flat and stood gazing with admiration at the famous "Little Ponds," a shallow puddle, you might call it, about sixty feet long and twenty-five feet wide, but a spot held sacred in the memory of all the old duck hunters for thousands upon thousands of the web-foots have dropped on the placid waters contained within its narrow confines. While we stood there a small flock of spoonbills came flying in and lit in a pond about one hundred yards north, which was afterward named the "Big Pond." Now was my chance again. I profited by having watched "Bill" and crawled up within easy gunshot. The spoonbills had been swimming about and were scattered. Picking out a big drake I let go and was tickled to death to see that I had killed him. As I ran back I flushed a teal with the tip of his wing broken. "Bill" easily caught him. He had probably been wounded the night before as the blood was fresh on the little green wing. With four ducks to our credit we went over into the field, sat down by the fence and rested. After partaking of some unch we concluded we were far enough from home and started back. On the way there "Bill" killed a cerlew and I secured two more plover. By two o'clock we were back to town. Do you think we went in the way we came out? Not much. Stringing our ducks, plover and cerlew we passed along by the old Joe Holder property now owned by Fred Glennan and up Main street we marched, where everybody could see us, the two happiest and proudest boys who rested their tired heads on welcome pillows that night in Redwood City.

TRUSTEES IN SESSION

At Monday's meeting of the Town Trustees the question of permitting boxing exhibitions was again up for consideration. A large delegation of influential residents was in attendance,

Mr. T. F. Curran renewed his plea for favorable consideration of the boxing game. The opponents, led by Mr. C. M. Doxsee, represented educational and community interests.

Mr. Doxsee read and presented a protest to the issuance of such permits and the Clerk read the signatures thereto, some 300 in number.

The debate was dignified, intense, yet deviod of personalities. One speaker thought there was nothing finer than boxing as an exercise, but drew the line at municipal approval of boxing exhibitions.

In his mind the question was, is this what the city wants, is it wise to welcome the conditions that attach thereto.

Trustee Tuchsen stated his desire to abide by the wishes of the electors.

President Sampson said that in all ssues a moment of decision finally arrived and that the board's previous action was to grant the request .

Trustee Merrill said the council had the right to grant a permit, also the right to revoke. His desire was to throw evey protection possible around young men. He made a motion that the City Attorney be instructed to prepare an ordinance, to be presented at the next meeting, prohibiting boxing exhibitions in Redwood City . The motion was duly seconded and carried.

Three bids for street sprinkling during thecoming six months were received. No contract was let, however, action being laid over until the next meeting.

The bids were: Ben Taylor, $8 per day; J. D. Smith, $7.68 per day; Tony Thomas, $6.00 per day for each team required.

No protests against the proposed paving of Winslow street, from Broadway to the railway crossing having been presented, a resolution was adopted ordering the work done. Bids which will be opened at an adjourned meeting to be held July 23d.

During National Red Cross week, it had been decided that Redwood City should "do its bit" and a pledge of $250 was made. The action of the committee received the unanimous endorsement of the trustees and an ordinance wa smade directing the payment of the amount.

Chairman Sampson reported that at the request of Mayor Rolph of San Francisco, he had represented this city as a member of the committee which had succeeded in securing the location of one of the divisional soldier's training cantonments near Stanford University . He strongly urged the importance of surrounding the large number of young men who will thus be brought into this vicinity with the best of moral conditions and that every effort should be made to enforce the strictest compliance with the regulations forbidding the sale of liquor to soldiers.

City Marshal Coleman reported that the collections of his office for thepast month amounted to a total of $2056.92.

Lower Tire Cost Than Ever—NOW

For, in the old days, tires not only cost motorists more per tire, but were also so far inferior to the present product, that the final cost—the cost per mile—was from 50 to 100 or more per cent. higher than you pay now.

United States Tires—the 'Royal Cord', the 'Nobby', the 'Chain', the 'Usco' and the 'Plain',

—one for every need of price and use,

—produced by the largest rubber manufacturer in the world,

—produced by the most experienced tire manufacturer in the world,

—produced by a time-tried, exclusive, patented, vulcanizing process,

—produced of only the most carefully selected materials,

—have so far eclipsed every other make of tire that

—United States Tires are famous for their mileage-giving qualities—their low cost per mile.

The proof?—the consistent and persistent tremendous sales increases of United States Tires.
